Firies to send pulses racing

THEY'VE changed their name and now, for one night only, the Little Heroes Foundation is all about the ladies.

For its first fundraiser under its new name, the former McGuinness McDermott Foundation is staging a ladies-only event which is set to send temperatures soaring.

The soiree - next Friday at the Hilton Adelaide - is a ladies night at which the only men in the room will be the delectable firemen from the famed Hall of Flames calendar and the foundation's Tim Ginever.

Produced to help the firies' bid to get the World Police and Fire Games, which next year will be held in New York, sales of the calendar also assist charities, in this case the Little Heroes Foundation and their attempt to buy a new MRI machine for the Women's and Children's Hospital.

That means the ladies in attendance - among them The Advertiser columnist Amber Petty who has come on board with the foundation - will be bedazzled by some buff, shirtless men - all in the name of charity, of course.

World Police and Fire Games

club member Duncan Bruce says helping out the foundation with raising funds on their ladies night was a logical step. "The boys had already taken their shirts off (for the calendar) so it was a no-brainer," Duncan tells Confidential.

What do the lads who have to take it off, think? Firies Mark Cunningham and former Power player Jared Poulton, shown left, are modest to a fault - perhaps as every time they pose they cop a ribbing from the other boys in the force. "I don't mind it for raising money," Jared ventures. "I suppose we have to do it for raising money, it's not much fun though," Mark quips.
